The MERCHANT of FLOWERS

Some television is remembered as a milestone because of the intense drama it brings to the screen.
Some is memorable as historic for courage in facing contemporary issues, tackling the great challenges of the day.
Some television is addictive because it speaks in simple terms of the great conflicts of power and lust, of compassion and contempt.
Some has the power of a psychological thriller, that tells of the strength of the human spirit and some television becomes an international addiction simply because millions of people cannot wait to know "what happens next"...

And once in a generation comes a project that combines all of these;

... welcome to THE MERCHANT OF FLOWERS.

"While it is impossible to know the exact number of young women who disappear annually as victims of international human traffickers who then force these unfortunate women into sexual slavery, it is at least in the tens of thousands. The official identities of these women are lost forever."

United Nations Sub-Commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights
(Excerpt paraphrased)

This is the story of one of these women.
